

RE:raito - DreamMap

What is DreamMap?

DreamMap is a project born from my life experiences and the vision shared with my brother.

It aims to create a self-sustaining island city—a place where we can eliminate outside influence and fully immerse ourselves in research.

But pursuing efficiency alone is no different from enabling crime.

That's why this city prioritizes ideals and safety over raw efficiency.

- The population is kept intentionally small and elite
- Every member contributes to research, education, defense, and daily life
- Eventually, homes, ships, smartphones, and PCs will all be developed in-house to ensure complete security

This city is designed to be a place where ideals and innovation can be protected and nurtured—a bold attempt to build a new kind of society that goes beyond the limits of the modern world.

DreamMap – The Central Island Vision

Culture over Convenience

We believe old traditions and intentional inefficiencies have value.

That's why our central island honors both cultural heritage and futuristic science.

- No skyscrapers will rise in our research zones. Instead, labs and workshops will be placed gently within natural forests.
- Industrial zones are strictly separated to avoid polluting daily life.
- No vehicles will be allowed. To protect nature and reduce accidents, we will rely on walking and AI cargo bots.
- Streets are designed for calmness, with spacious gardens and homes built at a distance from each other.

Walking isn't just transport—it's health, reflection, and peace.

The Structure of the City

The city is divided into three districts—not by class, but by role:

- Sage District: For researchers and thinkers. A quiet forested zone focused on discovery.
- Noble District: For those who support the project through belief and funding—not for profit, but out of shared ideals.
- Citizen District: For those who help maintain daily life: farmers, engineers, entertainers, builders.

This is not discrimination, but a way to ensure comfort and clarity in each person's purpose.

Symbols of Meaning

- A Western-style castle will stand as a symbol—not of royalty, but of protection and European heritage.
- A Japanese-style castle town will mirror it on the other side of the island, inspired by the Edo period.
  - Neither structure will have a king or lord. They exist only as cultural anchors.

Language

The city's official languages are Japanese and English.

- English will be used mainly by researchers and global thinkers—chosen for its speed and efficiency.
- Japanese, especially its classical form, will be valued for its depth, nuance, and ability to convey the unspoken.

Modern Japanese, as used today, may lack the richness we seek. But old Japanese still holds the power to teach, to feel, and to remember.

DreamMap – The Island Network

Islands of Diversity

The vision of DreamMap extends beyond the central island.

Surrounding it are multiple smaller islands, each designed to blend cultural heritage with scientific exploration—just like the main island, but with unique identities and research focuses.

Here are some examples:

-  Western Frontier Island
- Modeled after the spirit of 19th-century America, this island specializes in biological research, including wildlife, ecosystems, and life sciences.
-  Indian Kingdom Island
- Inspired by ancient Indian castles and cityscapes, this island focuses on geopolitical studies, diplomacy, and strategic philosophy.

Each island offers a different perspective—together, they form a harmonious network of knowledge and culture.

The Ocean Linear

To connect the main island with its satellites, we are developing a concept called the Ocean Linear.

Unlike traditional ships or airplanes, which cause pollution every time they move, the Ocean Linear is built with minimal long-term environmental impact.

Though its construction may have an initial footprint, once operational it offers a clean, sustainable way to travel between islands. Importantly, DreamMap cities do not rely on fossil fuels.

Self-sufficiency is central to our philosophy—energy must come from within, not from oil.

A detailed plan of the Ocean Linear is provided in a separate document.

DreamMap – The Core Four

To turn DreamMap into reality, we are searching for four core individuals. These are not just roles—they are lifelines. Each one is essential.

1. The Strategist

Someone calm, confident, and decisive.

They understand that our dreams may seem unrealistic—and that's exactly why they matter.

This person helps us ground our vision in reality, balancing ambition with action.

A quiet force who can say “yes” or “no” when no one else can.

2. The Flame

A person of strong conviction and unshakable justice.

They move with passion, not ego—and they're ready to stand beside us, not above us.

Their strength lies in sacrifice and in believing even when it's hard.

Someone who turns belief into action, and never runs from a fight.

3. The Anchor

We live with neurodivergence.

We've built the DreamMap in our minds—but we struggle with daily life.

Our environment is harsh: poverty, trauma, and a broken family. Our parents are both neurodivergent; our mother has PTSD from childhood abuse.

We don't need someone perfect. We need someone who understands, supports, and stays.

If you walk with us, we'll do the rest.

Someone who can pull us out—not by force, but by presence.

4. The Shield

If DreamMap becomes real, it will be targeted.

We'll need someone who understands defense—not for war, but for protection.

This person leads our security and ensures that no matter what comes, we can continue building.

A protector who stands firm—not out of anger, but out of love.

Final Note

We are not asking for heroes.

We are asking for those who are willing to believe—and act.

But there is one thing more important than any skill, title, or strength:

You must truly resonate with this dream.

If our vision feels like yours—if this future is something you'd protect as your own—then you are already one of us.

We're not looking for outsiders to help us.

We're looking for the few who already feel this is their home.

If you feel it, then you belong.
